The Meeting

Did I say it was a walk in the forest?
Well then. Very well.
There were trails in the forest that were sand-covered.
That is to say, it was domesticated.
There were signs of footprints, but no people.
Through the trees, a distant beach shook itself with tidal changes.
The waves heaved, a watery lung.
What was it like to touch him?
It is difficult to say. I will try to remember.
I recall only the weight of an arm,
trees crossing out the sun
and a path leading out into the open.
